Hannah Ritchie is a barrister specialising in civil and commercial litigation, with particular expertise in civil fraud and personal injury. As part of her personal injury practice, Hannah is regularly instructed on employers' liability, public liability, credit hire and trials concerning allegations of exaggeration of injuries, fundamental dishonesty, and deliberate layering.

Her experience also includes commercial contractual disputes, landlord and tenant matters and property/real estate litigation.

Hannah welcomes instructions across all areas of Chambers' commercial and civil practice including clinical negligence and travel law.

Having practised at the Employed Bar, she has extensive advocacy experience with trials, disposal hearings and interlocutory applications. Hannah has experience providing practical advice at all stages of litigation, drafting pleadings and applications, and representing clients across a broad range of civil/property/commercial disputes.

In her spare time, she enjoys surfing and skiing.
